Waterside, a distinctive part of the town, was a self-sufficient and tightly-knit industrial and commercial community in the 19th and early 20th centuries. traces of this more prosperous era are still in evidence today.

Waterside Walk

Discover Barton

Town Walks:
Waterside Walk

Barton upon Humber has a rich and varied history like many Market Towns in England, however it stands apart from the rest by virtue of the in-depth research and numerous publications about the town's heritage.

This walk is one of a series of 5 free leaflets produced by Barton upon Humber Civic Society

Urban walks:
Victorian Walk
Georgian Walk
Waterside Walk

Rural walks:
Parish pathways Inland
Parish pathways Humber Bank and area

These walks give a brief insight into Barton's past which can be followed in greater detail in the Town Guide reprinted by the Civic Society in 2007.

Further reading is available through the extensive work of the Barton on Humber Branch of the Workers Education Association. Currently in print and available to buy are the following titles:

- Great Changes in Barton: 1793 – 1900*
by Rex C. Russell
- The Medieval Churches of Barton on Humber*
by Geoffrey F. Bryant
- Barton and the River Humber 1086 – 1900*
by Rodney Clapson
- The Church in Victorian Barton*
by Dinah Tyszka

This walk is one of a series produced by members of the Barton-upon-Humber Civic Society Heritage Trail Sub-Committee. The walks are designed to focus on a particular part of the town and should take about an hour to complete.

Every attempt has been made to ensure the accuracy of the information contained in this leaflet. No responsibility can be accepted for any remaining errors.

Barton-upon-Humber Civic Society aims to maintain a pleasant townscape by helping to preserve buildings of historic or architectural importance and encouraging the construction of new buildings of good design. Our programme of activities includes illustrated talks, walks and help with practical projects. There are also visits to other villages, towns and cities.
